Implants are titanium roots that your own bone grows around; there are no known allergies or reactions to titanium. The titanium root, or implant, has a connector that joins the implant to the denture. Many people have dentures (20% of the population) and many have problems with them being loose, especially lower dentures. It might be possible to replace the removable dentures with fixed teeth on implants. If this is not appropriate then a patient's own denture can be attached to some implants so that it is still removable and easy to clean and maintain.

By placing two standard implants in the lower jaw, it is no longer possible for the patient to remove the lower denture with the tongue at the front. This has a profound beneficial effect on a patient's quality of life.

A more economic option involves placing 4 mini implants in the lower jaw - these take about an hour to fit. It is also possible to help hold in place a small partial denture with this method. Once the implants are in place the cost of any new dentures in the future is little more than a normal set.
